

Environmental & Sustainability Projects

Environmental and sustainability projects take many forms. Some funders have particular interests and/or fund in very restricted areas. Others are much more generalist.

In this table the “Geography” section indicates the areas of England that a funder is interested in. “National” indicates that there are no stated restrictions within England. Any stated restrictions are described.

The “Project Types” classification describes the kinds of projects that the funder has said they are interested in or that they have funded previously. For simplicity we have divided these into:

- Energy – projects that use greener mechanisms to generate electricity or heat (e.g., solar PV panels, biomass boilers, air source heat pumps).
- Efficiency – projects that reduce energy consumption (e.g., LED lighting, insulation).
- Water – projects that improve water quality or reduce water consumption (e.g., grey water systems) or improve quality of runoff water (e.g., sustainable drainage systems).
- Biodiversity – projects that improve biodiversity.
- Engagement – projects that focus on environmental awareness and education.
- Other – other types of projects, usually detailed in the grant maker’s entry
- General – all or most types of environmental projects. Any known exclusions will be detailed in the grant maker’s entry.

Web: www.ashden.org

Grant potential:

£10,000 or £20,000 per award

Interests: “The aims of Ashden are to contribute to the protection of the environment, the advancement of education and relief of poverty for the public benefit in developing countries, UK and elsewhere, by promoting the use of local sustainable and renewable energy sources..”

The Ashden Awards are for organisations that deliver sustainability at the local level, in ways that are innovative, scalable, and replicable, and through this bring social, economic, and environmental benefits.

Awards open annually in January and close in March.

There are three UK awards:

- Climate innovation
- Green skills
- Green Communities

The green communities award is the one most likely to be relevant to churches “The award will recognise an initiative that makes climate action relevant to the everyday lives of citizens and the things they care about, with particular attention on engaging beyond typical ‘green audiences.’ It will seek to reward work that demonstrates how climate action can cut carbon and tackle social issues (such as poor mental or physical health) at the same time. The issues tackled and approaches used could range from highlighting under-represented voices within the climate sector to art projects inspiring communities into action.”

- UK Community Foundations are networks of local funders. They cover the whole of England and are often based on historic counties. Visit www.ukcommunityfoundations.org for information about funders local to your project.

Social Investment

- Leapfrog enables positive social, environmental, and financial impact for communities, those in deprivation by enabling their participation in and benefit from, an energy system in transition to lower carbon intensity. Building on this experience, CO2Sense has broadened its remit to invest in the wider environmental sector including energy efficiency, energy storage and waste and recycling. www.co2sense.co.uk

Funding Networks

Networks of funders and individuals interested in funding projects. These groups do not accept unsolicited applications but will accept approaches made to members, who then share with the wider network if appropriate.
